Value Proposition for Business Customers

1. Hiring veterans is good for business; veterans have qualities that will contribute to the bottom line

- Leadership and teamwork
- Strong character
- Performance-oriented
- Experience in diverse and dynamic environments
- Expert technical skills
- Respect for structure and experience
- Disciplined and loyal
- Technologically savvy
- Resilience

To Employers

2. Alleviate concerns around hiring veterans

- We'll save you time, money, and effort in recruitment
- We'll help translate veterans' experience and skills so you can properly evaluate each candidate
- We'll support veterans prior to hiring with supplemental services, such as benefits, healthcare, legal aid, managing future deployments, etc.
- We'll connect you to a network of other businesses making this commitment on how to best support veterans in the workplace

3. Hiring veterans is good for your country

- Join the movement to support our troops, including those here already and those returning home

4. Hiring veterans offers tax incentives

- $2,100 to $9,000 in state and federal incentives

To Supportive Services

Single Stop USA and Mission Continues are located at 3 Workforce1 Career Centers (Queens, Brooklyn, Bronx) to provide supportive services to more than 2,400 additional low-income or unemployed New Yorkers, including veterans.

- Single Stop USA: determine benefits eligibility and provide access to (or support in accessing) public assistance, financial counseling, legal aid, and tax prep
- Mission Continues: determine veteran benefits eligibility, provide support in enrollment, and make direct referrals to over 20+ Robin Hood grantees.

Recruitment

- Focus on identification: Do not rely on self-attestation by veterans and their families.
- Clearly define and market program value and scope of offerings: Recognize your program cannot be everything to everyone; this includes defining value for both veteran candidates and employers.
- Invest in partnerships: Establish your credibility among organizations serving veterans for access to and referrals for veterans, especially returning veterans and families.
- Make services accessible: Veterans should find the program, not the other way around.
- Implement new data recording policies: There is limited access to federal data on location and military rank and specialties of veterans.

Career Development

- Prioritize hiring veterans on staff: This is the primary advice given by partner organizations, particularly those with case management or job development services for veterans.
- Invest in staff training: Provide resources for staff on better serving veterans, including proper assessment of military skills and experience for resume translation and job placement.
- All services are not equal: Career and training services must be developed that support veterans from prior eras, not just those recently separated.
- Locate expertise in veteran benefits: Need strong relationships with partners that can support VA and GI Bill navigation.
- Use new military-specific data for more accurate training and business development: Current sectors of focus are based on past system success, not the actual skills, experience, or preference of veterans.

Referrals

- Think beyond employers with hiring initiatives for matching: Based on LMI, encourage local employers with the most growth opportunity to commit to hiring veterans.
- Sell recruitment expertise first, veteran benefit second: Establish your full value with businesses, which includes, but is not limited to, the ability to source for qualified veteran candidates.
- Identify referral relationships and structure clear processes early on: Veterans with barriers to employment will often require off-site supportive services. Make sure there is an appropriate and reliable hand off in place.
- Regular reengagement: Regular follow-up ensures higher job placement and retention rates by offering additional opportunities for connection to employers and supportive services.
