The United States Department of Energy and the United States Department of Interior and its Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) are pursuing an aggressive build-out of wind power to address climate change and sustainability challenges. “The President set a bold goal of deploying 30 gigawatts (GW) of offshore wind by 2030, enough to power 10 million homes with clean energy, support 77,000 jobs, and spur private investment up and down the supply chain.” BOEM recently announced auction winners for five new offshore leasing sites off the coast of California, and marks the first commercial offshore leasing sites to be sold outside of the Atlantic. Other major auctions are planned for the Gulf of Mexico, Oregon Coast, Central Atlantic, and Gulf of Maine.
